

News Flash: Big houses also cost more to cool

 devblogs.microsoft.com/oldnewthing/20060803-26

August 3, 2006

Raymond Chen

Perhaps as a counterpart to the fact that big houses have bigger heating bills, NPR yesterday pointed out that bigger houses use more electricity for cooling. (NPR looks not at the “surprise” of big-house owners over the cost of energy, but rather the consequences of these big houses on the energy grid. But the headline was hard to pass up.)

Raymond Chen

Follow

