

Wait a second, I thought we stopped doing this back in 2003

 devblogs.microsoft.com/oldnewthing/20080220-01

February 20, 2008

Raymond Chen

It looks like Verizon's default DNS server for their customers is redirecting all failed DNS queries to their own site, calling the feature Advanced Web Search. Fortunately, they have instructions on how to opt out. The short version: Go to your DNS settings and change the last octet from .12 to .14.

Raymond Chen

Follow

