

Food products that are offenses against nature: Bisquick Shake 'n Pour

 devblogs.microsoft.com/oldnewthing/20080603-01

June 3, 2008

Raymond Chen

Yes, it's another entry in the extremely sporadic series of food products that are offenses against nature. Today it's the incorrectly-punctuated Bisquick Shake 'n Pour. For people for whom adding a half cup of milk and one egg to two cups of Bisquick powder is too complicated, now they've even dehydrated the milk and egg and pre-measured the mix, so all you need to do is add a measured amount of water. Because you know, cracking an egg is so time-consuming.

My colleague who tips me off to all the foods that are offenses against nature let me know by email that even she, mother to a three-week-old baby, was able to somehow pull it together and measure out the milk and crack the egg. "Oh wait," she corrected herself. "I made the pancakes from scratch."

Raymond Chen

Follow

