

Not my finest hour: Getting instructions on doing something I've already done

 devblogs.microsoft.com/oldnewthing/20081127-00

November 27, 2008

Raymond Chen

Last year, I sent some email to the people who run our team's check-in validation tool asking how I could add a new rule to the validation tests. One of the members wrote back, "You do it just like this guy," and sent me a reference to another check-in that added a validation rule.

That other check-in was made by me.

But wait, it gets better.

That other check-in? It added the very rule I was thinking about adding.

Raymond Chen

Follow

