

You don't make something easier to find by hiding it even more deeply devblogs.microsoft.com/oldnewthing/20110822-00

August 22, 2011

Raymond Chen

Commenter rolfhub suggested that, to help people recover from accidentally going into Tiny Footprint Mode, the Task Manager could display a right-click context menu with an entry to return to normal mode. My initial reaction to this was Huh? Who right-clicks on nothing? Tiny Footprint Mode is itself already a bad secret hidden setting. Having the exit from the mode be a right-click menu on a blank space is a double-secret hidden setting.

If I had dictatorial control over all aspects of the shell, I would put a Restore button in the upper right corner to let people return to normal mode.

Raymond Chen

Follow

