

By Grabthar's Hammer, it's a Galaxy Quest documentary

 devblogs.microsoft.com/oldnewthing/20191017-01

October 17, 2019

Raymond Chen

The science fiction parody Galaxy Quest was a moderate success at the box office when it was released twenty years ago. It subsequently gained a following, particularly among the Star Trek fan community, even earning a place in the voting for “Best Star Trek movie”. (It came in seventh.)

“Galaxy Quest is the best Star Trek movie.” — Wil Wheaton

“Why didn’t we do this?” — Brent Spiner

“Brilliant. No one laughed louder or longer in the cinema than I did.” — Patrick Stewart

“For the life of me I was trying to understand who he [Tim Allen] was imitating.” — William Shatner

(Man, I sure hope Shatner had his tongue firmly planted in his cheek.)

And now there’s Never Surrender: A Galaxy Quest Documentary.

Watch Video At: <https://youtu.be/sfgg4Wm6xCE>

Screening at selected theaters in the United States, for one night only: November 26, 2019.
The screening includes deleted scenes and a Galaxy Quest trailer by Honest Trailers.

Bonus chatter: The Longhorn project (which eventually became Windows Vista) famously underwent a development reset. The work to reset the engineering system was code named Omega 13, after the time travel device in Galaxy Quest.

Raymond Chen

Follow

